Handout: The Culture of Hanic

Hanic has a long and rich culture and history.

Everybody in this society follows the same religion, which is based on respect. The young do not question their elders. People in authority are treated with respect and their ideas are followed. There are no government social services, so as people get older they are taken in and looked after and treated with great respect by younger family members.

All people have their place in society, and everybody accepts that.

The sexes are not treated equally. Men and women have different roles, and the oldest male is always considered the head of the household.

Many of the people work in the fields to produce crops that are sold in the market. In the cities there is great economic development taking place, but the traditional rules of society that have served this society so well for many generations are still respected.

The people of Hanic are very proud of their civilisation, and think that their way of life is the way everybody should live.
